

THE FLAVIANS

Liam Blomqvist, Joakim Jägerhult, Anna Vaverková, Tom Wills

After sharing a bunk in one of Berlin's numerous hostels for several weeks, Swedish Joakim Jägerhult (drums) and Liam Blomqvist (vocals & guitar) began to share ideas and develop what was soon to become their next project, The Flavians. With the later addition of Czech Republic's Anna Vaverková (vocals & keys) and Thomas Wills (vocals & bass) from the UK, the band began to write together. Drawing inspiration from bands such as The Beatles, Grateful Dead, and The Beach Boys, they set out to join the warm, nostalgic sounds of the 60s with the frantic, hedonistic energy of Berlin.

With vocal harmonies from a blend of three diverse voices, psychedelic guitar textures and lyrics discussing themes such as destitution and alienation, they walk the tightrope between the surreal and the mundane while staying grounded and focused on writing accessible, melodic, yet experimental songs.

The band have been busy playing packed out shows in their adoptive hometown, tallying up over 300,000 streams and have been played on over 60 radio stations around the world. The Flavians started their summer by supporting Catfish and the Bottlemen at a sold out Huxley's Neue Welt in Berlin followed by two shows at Glastonbury Festival and are ending their summer with four performances at Germany's renowned, Reeperbahn Festival.

Sleek Magazine about Eight Berlin bands to watch that aren't techno

'After all of the hard drugs and partying (or for some of us, an early evening milchkafee before a quick dance to someone spinning Ariel Pink at Schokoladen, followed by going straight to bed), we need some wistful & light folk-pop to soothe the things that paracetamol cannot.'
